RE: Investment Research Intern

Dear Hiring Manager,

With a quantitatively-focused mindset, an innate passion for problem-solving, and experience working in a financial environment, my values and strengths position me as an ideal candidate for an Investment Research Intern. Having held highly analytical and leadership-oriented roles, I wish to apply my knowledge of investments and technology in a professional environment and believe that my interests and sharp attention to detail will allow me to succeed as an intern. I am an international student at the University of Calgary and I located this job posting through the University Co-op Job Board.

My enthusiasm for problem-solving, analytics, and finance is evident through my dedication to extracurriculars and success in coursework in finance and computer science. To develop my financial literacy, I analyzed financial securities and presented pitches in a wealth management student association, where I now act as a sector co-director, leading a team of analysts. In doing so, I gained proficiency in financial analysis, market research, and communication. I have also combined my degree in business with a degree in computer science to pursue my interest in technology, and I currently act as an executive member of an incubator-type student club centered around entrepreneurship and software development, where I help foster strategic startup creation.

My multinational upbringing in five different countries has taught me to adapt to unfamiliar situations and quickly establish meaningful relationships. Combined with my composed nature, these qualities significantly improve my ability to work in a dynamic environment. Furthermore, my persistence and desire to learn will allow me to succeed in a fast-paced setting and promptly respond to changing demands. If deemed a suitable applicant, I humbly request you to email me at the address displayed above. I deeply appreciate your consideration.

Sincerely,
Fedor Prokopchuk
